Summer Days in England.

But by far the most interesting features of the Plain, are the dim relics of its ancient importance as a grand gathering place of the British tribes, at a period anterior to recorded history. That it not only was the site of their councils, but the Mecca of their religion, is shown alike by tradition and by the monuments they have left to excite the wonder and baffle the curiosity of succeeding ages. These consist of burrows, artificial mounds and Druidical circles, many of which would not doubt furnish important relics if excavations were made. Some few have already been examined; but the mistaken reverence of the present Lord of the Manor prevents further investigation for the present.

In the loneliest portion of the naked plain stand the grim relics of Stonehenge, moveless and silent, yet like the Sphinx, offering to every passer-by a riddle that excites his hopeless curiosity. What British nation of which we have any record ever had sufficient unity of purpose and knowledge of the mechanical arts to bring these vast boulders from the distance whence they must have come, to shape them, and to set them up? What barbarous nation ever conceived a design of such colossal grandeur? The mere relics of the structure impress the traveller with awe as he sees them towering against the sky, in his path; and on nearer approach he is lost in conjecture of the means employed in its construction.

An almost obliterated trench surrounds the whole, but the rest of the soil is simply the level grassy plain. So far as the such weighing nearly twenty tons, and capped by continuous circles of massive stones, of nearly the same size, not merely resting on their summits but joined to them by projecting tenons and corresponding mortises. The diameter of the outer circle must be more than three hundred feet. Two enormous trilobes stood in the inner circle, the largest stone remaining of which is estimated to weigh seventy tons; and between them in the centre of all is a flat stone sixteen feet in length, which is conjectured to have been the altar. The outer circle remains more perfect than the other, nearly twenty of the thirty huge columns which originally composed it remaining upright. Their average height is nearly twenty feet, their breadth six or seven, and thickness three; but standing as they do on the wide unbroken plain, with nothing save the shorn sward around them, they impress the beholder as huge even beyond their actual measurement. We sit upon one of the fallen columns and rack the imagination for a picture of the Titanic temple ere its gods and its worshippers had fled from it. Was it even then only a vast skeleton, intended not for shelter or secrecy but only to add dignity to the altar it surrounded? Or were these massive racks the mere framework of an enclosed edifice, the perishable portions of which have disappeared? Traces of a vast entrance, higher and wider than the average space left between the pillars seem to favor the latter supposition. Antiquarians have exhausted all that can be said or guessed, and all is very little. In its massive simplicity, rude and yet grandiose, showing the mark of human labor, yet without a fragment of human record, Stonehenge excites and confounds, and overawes the mind more than any other relic of forgotten ages. The edifices of Egypt and Assyria have their history written on their face; the traveller on our own continent reads in the ruins of Central America the plans and purposes of their founders; but you may spend your life time among these gray boulders and come away as ignorant and as curious as we who at the end of an hour turned our horses again toward Salisbury.

Ninety-six miles of railroad, done in less than three hours took us up to London. It is up to London, in English phrase, from every part of the island, as in old times it was up to Jerusalem for every devout Jew; and the temple that to their idols stands on the highest pinnacle of the eminence is spoken of with mixed reverence and affection as the abode of "the old lady of Threacredle street."

We publish the following in addition to our necessarily brief announcement yesterday, of the ministerial changes connected with the M. E. churches in this city. We understand the appointments by the Conference this year have been far more general than usual, and we regret that we have not room to spare to give the whole. The Conference closed its session at Fall River, on Monday evening last, at 9 o'clock.

We regret to be obliged to announce that Rev. Mr. Husted, of the Marlborough Street charge in this city, is not to remain here another year; but we congratulate the Methodists of Fairhaven, Mass., (and indeed that whole community,) in the selection made for them. They will find in Mr. Husted not only an excellent preacher, but a most laborious and affectionate pastor, and one who reminds us not a little of the "Beloved Disciple," such is the peaceful, quiet, unostentatious love, which beams out in his every word, as well as in his expression. Peace and prosperity attend him.

After all, our Methodist friends in this city, in both their churches, are very fortunate. Of Rev. Mr. White, who succeeds Mr. Husted, a Christian of another communion, writing to a friend here, says: "I hear with much satisfaction, that my beloved brother White, from Elm Street, is your new pastor. I assure thee that he is the very man for Newport. I admire the man. He is a real worker, and his labors have been wonderfully owned and blessed by the great Head of the Church. He reminds me of the late Joel Knight. Receive him in the love of the gospel, and labor with him to destroy the work of Satan." We have no acquaintance with Mr. White, but have much confidence in the man who thus speaks of him, and doubt not that, like his predecessor, he will prove an acquisition to the community.

Of Rev. Mr. Richards, who succeeds Mr. Lyon, at the Thames Street church, we hear an excellent report, and congratulate them, also, on this occasion.

The following are the remaining appointments most likely to interest our readers:

Middletown, Rev. Mr. Morrison.

Portsmouth, " " Alvord.

Bristol, " " Baylies.

Warren, " " Titus.

Globe Village, " " Swinton.

Norwich, Ct., " " E. Upham.

Rev. Geo. M. Carpenter, Presiding Elder.

CONNECTICUT ELECTIONS.

No doubt remains of the election of all four Republican candidates for Congress as follows:

Dist. I. (Hartford and Tolland Counties.) Dwight Loomis over Alvin P. Hyde (Dem.) by 156 majority. Ezra Clark, Jr. (late Member), ran as an American bolter, and 270 votes.

Dist. II. (New Haven and Middlesex Counties.) John Woodruff is elected by 480 majority over Samuel Arnold, late Democrat Member.

Dist. III. (New London and Windham Counties.)—Alfred A. Burnham is elected over Rufus L. Baker, Democrat, by a handsome majority. The following additional returns this morning:

No doubt remains of the election of the entire Republican State ticket, consisting of Wm. A. Buckingham, Governor, Norwich. Julius Catlin, Lieut. Governor, Hartford. John Boyd, Sec. of State, Winchester. Lucius J. Hendee, Treasurer, Hebron. William H. Buell, Controller, Clinton.

The Legislature stands very much as last year. Redding, though tied on Congress, elects two Republican members. Last year, divided.

The Sickles Case.

The trial of Daniel E. Sickles for the murder of Philip Barton Key commenced at Washington D. C. on Monday, before Judge Crawford of the District Court.

Mr. Sickles has a formidable array of counsel. These who will take the leading parts at the trial are Mr. E. M. Stanton, formerly of Pittsburgh, now of this city, and Messrs. James T. Brady and John Graham of New York. Mr. Graham will probably open the case for the defense, and Mr. Brady close; but this, which is understood to be the present arrangement, may be modified as the trial proceeds.

The attorneys who prepare the case, find and marshal the evidence, and do other work that must be done by persons of local experience, are Mr. Daniel Radcliffe, a Government Solicitor of the Court of Claims, Messrs. Chilton and Magruder, formerly of Virginia, who now practice both there and in Washington where they have an office, and Col. Phillips, formerly of Alabama.

The Hon. Reverdy Johnson of Baltimore, and Mr. Thomas F. Meagher of New York, act as consulting counsel, but will probably take no active part at the trial.

Add to these Mr. Sickles himself, who has not been long out of practice, and we have ten lawyers engaged for the defense.

Mr. Ould, the District Attorney, has but one assistant, Mr. Carlisle, of the firm of which stand very high at the Washington bar. But Mr. Carlisle does not, in strictness, appear for the prosecution. The Government having refused to employ additional counsel, he is in attendance simply for the purpose of looking after the interests of Mr. Sickles's relatives and friends, and may therefore feel a natural unwillingness to take a prominent part in the proceedings.

Two or three other lawyers, among whom is ex-Senator Badger of North Carolina, have given Mr. Ould the benefit of their experience and counsel in the preparation of the case; but, to all intents and purposes, he will be pitted alone against ten.

There were no ladies in the Court, and no accommodations for any.

The father of Mr. Sickles and the father of Mrs. Sickles, Mr. Baglioli, occupied seats together.

Among the friends of the accused in attendance were Peter Cugger, Cornelius Tenbroeck of Albany, Wm. Miner, Emanuel Hart, and Thomas Byrnes of New York, and the Hon. George Eustis of Louisiana.

The latter gentleman, who is to be married to Miss Corcoran of Washington this week, must find peculiar interest in the revelations expected of Washington life.

The first two days were employed in empanneling jurors. All were excluded who had a bias or had formed an opinion, or had conscientious scruples against capital punishment; or were not possessed of a property qualification of at least $800. Some of the answers to these questions were very curious, and there was an evident desire on the part of many jurors to escape serving by expressing an opinion.

One had no impression on his mind that would influence his conduct as a juror; is not biased on either side, but has his sympathies.

The Judge thought that this expression of sympathy rendered the juror incompetent.

Mr. Stanton held that the question here was one of judgment, not of heart, and that sympathies were not a disqualification, except they went to the extent of influencing the judgment.

The Judge thought that, if a man had sympathies on either side, they affected his impartiality.

The juror, on being further questioned said that he could most undoubtedly render a fair and impartial judgment. He did not know that his sympathies would cloud his judgment, it case were clear.

The Judge thought, that the Juror's answers amounted to a disqualification and the Juror was ordered to stand aside.

Exception was taken.

Another had "formed and expressed an opinion founded on rumor, thinks he could render a fair verdict on the evidence, had always the opinion that every person who commits wilful murder ought to suffer for it; has no bias or prejudice on either side." Disqualified.

Another gave a very singular reason for prejudice.

George E. Kirk, called—Has formed an opinion from rumor, and from the relation that he stood to the prisoner, as a married man, he should be afraid to sit as a juror. Disqualified.

On the fact that the whole number of jurors who were sworn to try the case was 100, of whom 25 were challenged, 75 remained, and 75 were sworn.

1. Horie Arnold, Washington County, merchant.

2. James Davis, Washington County, farmer.

3. John E. Neale, Washington City, merchant.

4. Wm. M. Hopkins, Washington City, merchant.

5. Wm. Bond, Washington City, shoe manufacturer.

The jurors then sworn were allowed to separate, but were duly cautioned by the Judge.

Mr. Stanton called the attention of the Court to the fact that the prisoner was placed in the box where his counsel had no ready access to him. He asked the Court to order the box to be placed in such a position that Mr. Sickles could confer with him. In point of fact, he may as well remain in jail during the trial of his case, as he where he is now placed.

The Judge asked whether counsel had ever known a man to be tried for murder who was not placed in the dock. Mr. Magruder admitted that the prisoner might first be placed in the dock, but the practice in Virginia, Alabama, New York and other States, was that the prisoner should sit beside his counsel, and have, if need be, facilities for writing.

The Judge had never seen a man tried for murder who was not placed in the dock, and had never read of such a case—er aily not in England; he was not disposed to make any distinction in this case.

Mr. Stanton disclaimed a desire to have any distinction made; they would be satisfied with the arrangement suggested by the Judge.

Instruct ions to that effect were given to the Marshal, and the Court at 1 o'clock adjourned.

On the second day, Tuesday, seventy-five talesmen were summoned.

No additional Juror was accepted and sworn, until the 24th name was drawn. The disqualification was on the general ground of having formed opinions from newspapers or conversation with witnesses, and, therefore, incapacity to render a fair and impartial verdict.

Robt. W. Hoe called—Had formed an opinion, but would not say that he could not render an impartial verdict; from his present impressions, he would rather be excused.

Mr. Stanton submitted that, if the Juror's impression would not prevent him rendering a verdict according to the weight of the evidence, he would be a competent Juror.

The Judge—If the Juror says he can render an impartial verdict he is competent.

Mr. Stanton—The Juror has not yet come to that point. I propose to ask him whether he could not render a verdict according to the evidence, irrespective of his prejudices.

Mr. Carlisle spoke against the competency of the Juror. Mr. Phillips contended that he was competent. The only test of the qualification of the Juror was as to the question of his being a liber homo, free to the influence of testimony.

He was understood to reply to that in the affirmative. The Judge had not so understood the juror.

Mr. Phillips to the Juror—If put upon the stand, could you render an impartial verdict, according to the evidence in the case?

Juror—I should not like to risk it.

The Judge—I think that is a very sensible answer, after what the juror had said before. Disqualified.

The calling of talesmen was continued, but no additional Juror had been selected when the fifth talesman was called.

The remaining twenty-five talesmen were called, and out of these two more Jurors were selected and sworn, making altogether eight Jurors.

Seventy-five additional talesmen were ordered to be summoned for Wednesday morning and the Court adjourned.

On offering the result of his long study and practical experience to the afflicted, he is governed by humanity only, for so long have they been deceived by miserable quack nostrums, that it is now that some healthy mode of practice should be introduced.
